Jetion Holdings Limited
("Jetion" or "the Company")

British Standards Institution (BSI) Accreditation & Product Waste Recycling

Jetion Holdings Limited (AIM: JHL) the manufacturer of solar cells and modules, is pleased to announce that it has received key UK accreditation for its quality systems.

BSI Accreditation

The Company announces that it has received BSI ISO9000 system accreditation. The accreditation recognises that Jetion has the systems in place to manufacture high quality solar modules which will enhance customer confidence in the Company's products. This will give Jetion important leverage in its European markets.

Currently Jetion exports the majority of its production, either directly or through intermediaries, mostly into European markets - and BSI system accreditation will enable more direct sales to end customers, thus capturing more of the value chain and enhancing margins.

Recycling material for further manufacturing

Jetion is also pleased to announce that it has commenced recycling the limited scraps from solar cell production into small modules. The Company is pleased to announce that it has already received orders for small modules from a key Indonesian customer.

Commenting on these developments, Dipesh Shah, Chairman of Jetion said:

"BSI accreditation increases confidence in our products which will strengthen and expand Jetion's customer base in Europe including the UK. The Company is also pleased to have signed agreements for the construction of the third and fourth solar cell production lines, which will double total production capacity from 50MW to 100MW per annum. We expect the two lines to commence production before the end of 2008.

"These developments demonstrate that operations continue to advance successfully, progressing the business and improving margins in the longer term."
